The Victoria native, Steve Hall has returned to the dance scene after a long, bumpy yet strengthening road of recovering from a knee injury.

Steve started his career back in his junior years of school, break dancing with the boys in his high school dance studio. He studied dance through grades 8, 9 and 10 at Colquitz Junior Secondary School, followed by senior high dance in grades 11 and 12 at Spectrum Community School, which is known for its quality dance programs.

Taking hold of an up-and-coming scene, he managed to introduce a flurry of new dancers to the bboy scene. Steve taught at various local dance studios for several years, instructing in break, hip hop, and street. He also taught a series of workshops and classes at many schools. Steve has performed and competed in shows all over the city, and was featured in the Times Colonist newspaper, as well as appearing on Check 6 television. Also known for volunteering at community centers to help inspire struggling kids, Steve has not limited himself to just one style of dance, as he has extensive knowledge in Jazz, Funk, Modern, Ballet, Swing, HipHop, and Street.

His love for taking one style and fusing it with an unrelated style has given him a unique place today in the Victoria dance scene.
